

Working It Out:
AHRB Innovation Research Project

Investigators:
Gilli Bush-Bailey & Jacky Bratton

Friday 26th July 2002: The Boilerhouse, Royal Holloway

Programme:

This research project has focussed on collaborative group rehearsal as the place in which Jane Scott's plays were finally shaped and may still be rediscovered. The workshop has sought to apply the still-developing procedures of 'practice as research' to theatre history, and is something of a high-risk undertaking.

The direction of the four week workshop has been informed by scholarly research from a range of academic disciplines and performance practices. The day will begin with short presentations from each of the contributors and following a showing of the practical work in the afternoon you are invited to participate in a plenary session with the full company.

- 10.00: Arrival, coffee and welcome at The Boilerhouse, RHUL.
- 10.30: Introduction to the Project by Gilli Bush-Bailey and Jacky Bratton
- 10.50: Dick McCaw - Movement trainer
- 11.10: Sarah Hibberd - Music
- 11.30: Valerie Cumming - Costume
- 11.50: Lucy Nevitt - Combat / fight arranging
- 12.00: Giannandrea Poesio - Dance - mime
- 12.20: Peter Hulton - Documentation process

Introduction to the afternoon showing followed by

- 1.00: Lunch - Board Room / Conference Room, International Building, RHUL
- 2.30: Showing of scenes from The Old Oak Chest & The Inscription - Boilerhouse
- 4.00: Tea
- 4.30: Plenary session with contributors and the company
- 6.00: Close

The Plays:

The Inscription was a successful stage confection, based on Arthur Murphy's 1770 verse tragedy The Desert Island. To Murphy's 'very dull' (Genest) four-hander Scott added stage interest in exactly the way he himself rejected, in his Preface, as the crude suggestion of a friend: "Can't you," said he, "throw in something here and there to season it more to the public Appetite? – Suppose you were to change the Title, and fix the Scene among the Anthropophagi ... a few of those extraordinary Personages exhibited on the Stage, will prove very acceptable: – What think you of an Irish servant in it? ... add some aerial beings, and conclude the Whole with a drunken Song by the tars of Old England."

Following this prescription closely – who knows how ironically? – Scott has created a subplot in which comic/heroic sailors tangle with preposterous cannibals; she herself played a mischievous midshipman, putting in his mouth outrageous patriotic claptraps only imaginable in 1814. It's interesting that her burletta/burlesque line in the play actually mirrors the tragic main plot, with a native woman attempting in vain to recapture the jack tar who married and deserted her, while the tragic European wife Matilda is actually reunited with her husband Henry.

We are presenting a heavily cut version of the whole play, whose simple story will, we hope, be intelligible in this form, even if its threads are left a little loose.

Jane Scott's only published play, The Old Oak Chest was written in February 1816, during the crisis following the Napoleonic wars, and its political potential made it a favourite of the illegal Radical theatres. Its unified and coded plot, disguised by the stage Gothic mode, revolves around an exiled General, Almanza, whose child and fortune have been secretly preserved from the depredations of the present ruler, Count Lanfranco, by a band of smugglers. Smugglers were popular figures in British culture for many years, and at this point represented the ideal of Free Trade, as songs and toasts make plain within the play. They are opposed to a band of robbers, encouraged by Lanfranco himself – whom we may read as an oppressive and rapacious government. Jane Scott's own role was Roda, the daughter of an ambiguously violent woodcutter allied to Lanfranco's robbers. In the scenes we are presenting, Roda protects the young Henrico de Rosalva, who is carrying Almanza's pardon from the court, and Roda and Tinoco, a smuggler, the brother of her fiancé, are carried off by force to the kitchens of Lanfranco's castle.
